Jesuit Estates Issue (Canada)

Early in the nineteenth century, the Jesuit order was reconstituted and began work in Canada in the 1840's. The question of the Jesuit lands arose and in 1888, the government of Quebec passed an act offering the Jesuits {dollar}400,000 in compensation for their lost lands. This decision to endow a religious organization from public funds led to controversy throughout the country.

Here are entered works on the controversy in the late nineteenth century concerning compensation to the Jesuits for the loss of the lands that they held during the French régime. Because the Society of Jesus had been suppressed in 1773, the Jesuit lands, now vested in the Crown were transfered to the government with the stipulation that the revenue derived from them should be used for educational purposes.
